d visits to Cube of U.S. congressother officials and journalists as a ans of sending messages to Washington cross the wide political breach separating the two countries. Such contacts have lessened, both in frequency and impact, under the Reagan administration, which consis-tently has blamed Cuba as the "source" of conflict in Central America. In its early days the administration contemplated imposing measures ranging from a saval quarantine to a direct military action against the island.

But since the immigration agreement was concluded Dec. 14, Castro has played host to a delegation of U.S. Catholic bishops and has been added. and has been visited by three U.S. Conen accompanied by several scientists

The congressional delegation, including Reps. Mickey Leland (D-Texas) and Jim Leach (R-lowa) and headed by Rep. Bill Aler (D-Ark.), carried Castro's message to Washington. Alexander later said that in a meeting the day after their return Jan. 17 he told Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinerger that "Castro wants to normalize relations with the United States, period."
"He's waiting for someone to talk to, He's standing there like a bridesmaid," said Alexander, who is chief deputy majority whip in the House and a vocal critic of the Rean administration's policies in Central

After questioning whether Castro can be trusted, Weinberger "promised to bring it up with the president and with [Secretary of State George P.] Shultz," Alexander said in a telephone conversation in Washington.

t the end of the lengthy interview Wednesday in his office in the Palace of the Revolution, Castro emphasis that nothing I have said here was ded to be hostile toward the United States." He had noted throughout that Cuba had observed favorably both the substance and the tone of the recent immigration ne-gotiations, which he characterised as "ex-cellent. Very serious and respectful."

The talks themselves were a long time starting and followed a diplomatic offer made by the Rosgan administration last March and a June visit to Havana by them. Democratic presidential candidate Jesselecture and the starting of the startin Jackson, who helped persuade Castro to accept the offer.

Although discussions between the two governments began in New York in July, they were asspended without-public expla-nation in August because of what Castro said in last week's interview was an "absolutely unnecessary" flight of a U.S. high-fly-ag SR71 agy place over Cuban territory.

According to Castro and other Cuban ofcials, while the United States frequently flies such aircraft around the island, it rarely penetrates Cuben air space. The alle Angust overflight was the first since late 1963, they said, and was viewed as "provoc-ative" while the immigration talks were un-

United States provided a satisfactory an swer indicating the flight was unrelated t the negotiations.

The Defense Department declined to re spond last week to a Washington Post in iry about the incident, noting that as matter of policy it "does not comment o reconnaissance flights."

In general, Castro said, the Reagan ad ministration had stepped up military maneu vers off its coast and at the U.S. naval bea at Guantanamo on the eastern tip of Cube and greatly increased serial surveillance of the island nation. Other Cuben officials said that flights in international air space around unar ungus m anternational air apace around Cuba by the SR71 planes had increased from eight during the Carter administration to 120 during the first four years of the Reagan presidency. Flights directly over Cuba, they said, had decreased from five during factor? during Carter's term to four since Reagan became president.

In a list of what he called "Nostile" acts by the administration, Castro also included "inified economic measures, the economic blockade," and the exertion of "great pressure to obstruct the rescheduling of Cuba's external debt" with the West.

"In the political field, it also has been very agressive," he said, "and in the military field, it has constantly threatened us. All that is true. But nevertheless, we are grateful. I'm speaking seriously, we are very grateful.

Why? Because it forced us to undertake two big revolutions." One, he said, nounted to a rethinking of Cuba's aconomic structure that has resulted in an ongoing austerity drive, an emphasis on import substitution, and the fulfillment of trade commitments with the Soviet Bloc.

More importantly, Castro said, "during the past four years; in view of the threat of the United States, we have totally changed the United States, we have totally changed the United States, we have totally changed to the United States and our conceptions regarding defense. have multiplied our forces by many times, to the point that we have become an unconquerable country. Invulnerable, unoccu-included among the new defense measures is what has amounted to the reestabment of a nationwide militia that has ined and armed hundreds of thousands of tr Cubans along the lines of the force that existed following the Bay of Pigs invasion in 1961. "Every citizen in this country knows what to do," Castro said, "in the event of a blockade, a war of attrition, bombings, an invasion, even in case of an occupation of the national territory.

"It would be very costly for us, and it's not a test we would like to go through. But it would be very costly for the aggressors, and it would be a cost they could not bear ... We know this, and the U.S. experts in matters of war know this as well.

But in a lengthy monologue that chroncled rising debt, unemployment and social pressures in the Third World, particularly pressures in the Third Worse, purchasely in Latin America, Castro indicated his belief that time is working toward dialogue and inst what he characterised as an interntionist U.S. policy in the hemisphere. He said the Latin Americans, long separated by a "every man for himself" attitude, are starting to see joint efforts as the only so-

Latin America is a powder keg," he said. "It's an explosive situation. It's a serious thing, and how are they going to solve it? It's better that we start thinking about all of these problems.
